20 reasons to become an American football referee

- 1. It's an excellent way to get involved in a sport even if you aren't particularly athletic.
- 2. American football referees don't get abused like soccer refs do.
- 3. The referees have the closest view of the action without having to wear pads.
- 4. American football is one of the fastest growing team sports in Britain.
- 5. We provide excellent induction training for new members who have never been involved in the sport or officiated before.
- 6. It will help you keep fit and active.
- 7. You will get paid for each game you referee.
- 8. It's excellent on the CV shows integrity, commitment and responsibility.
- 9. Refereeing American football is a team activity you're never on your own; you always have at least 3 colleagues with you for support.
- 10. You will be assigned a "buddy" to help you through your training.
- 11. We have two seasons in Britain, so you can referee games all year round if you want to, or just in the summer or just in the winter.
- 12. Part of your training will come from top-notch referees from the USA with Division 1 college and even NFL experience.
- 13. There are currently 200 vacancies for American football referees in Britain.
- 14. Joining BAFRA is the first rung on a ladder that can lead to officiating the top games in Britain, European tournaments, and even the World Championships.
- 15. American football refereeing is open to men and women, but you have to be 18 or older.
- 16. American football can be exciting in ways that other sports can't match.
- 17. Striped uniforms make you look slimmer.
- 18. Britain has some of the top American football referees in the world outside America; for example, five BAFRA members were employed by NFL Europe.
- 19. As well as contact football, we also provide officials for the increasingly popular flag football variant of the sport.
- 20. American football referees are the nicest bunch of people you would ever want to meet.
